A STORY OF GOLKONDA

The War of Mirrors

A tale of Chaya-Golkonda

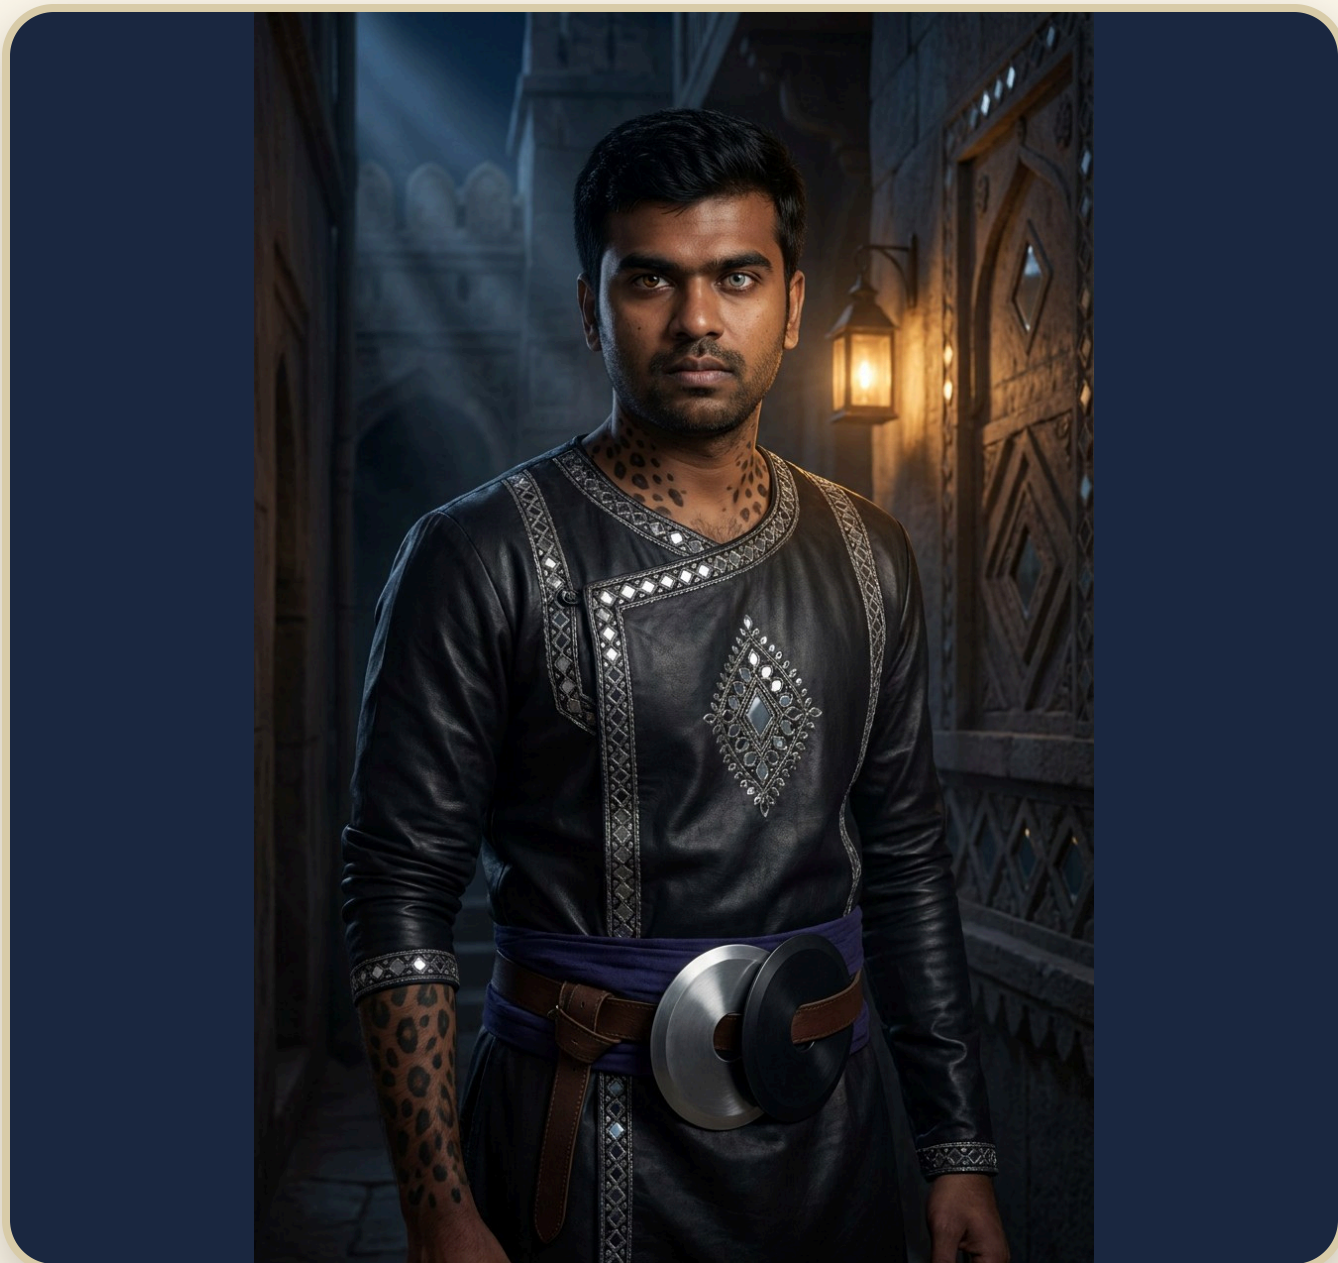

The War of Mirrors

A tale of Chaya-Golkonda

A tale of Chittaranga, the boy with two eyes,
and the shadow that ate a city.

From Hulmane — The Saga

Retold for young readers

Chittaranga was born with two different eyes — one brown, one grey. His grey eye could see what was hidden.

He lived in Golkonda, a city built on secrets.
Every alley had eyes, and every smile hid a plan.

He fought with two spinning discs — Chitra the silver, and Ranga the dark. They flew back to his hands like birds.

Deep under the city lived Qutb-Chaaya, the Shadow Sultan. His own shadow had swallowed him whole.

His blade was the Mirror of Death. Whoever looked into it saw their own deepest fear.

Chittaranga's twin sister believed him. She stepped into the mirrors to learn their secret.

In the Hall of Diamonds, the Shadow Sultan waited — not one of him, but fifty.

Every mirror made more shadows. Chittaranga cut them, but they came back like smoke.

Beaten and afraid, he sat before an ancient flame. Fire has no reflection — it shows only what is real.

The Sultan turned the whole city into a mirror-maze. No one knew who was real anymore.

So Chittaranga put out every light. In the dark, mirrors are blind and shadows cannot live.

His sister guided him through the dark. His disc struck true, and only a lonely old man was left.

Dawn came through the broken mirrors. His sister stepped free, alive at last.

Every spot on his body was now a truth he had seen. Golkonda could trust its own eyes again.
